TPIR : Le tribunal établit un précédent important

La traduction française d'un recueil de jurisprudence présente les décisions du Tribunal pour le Rwanda

(New York, le 20 mai 2005) – La jurisprudence des tribunaux pénaux internationaux pour le Rwanda et l'ex-Yougoslavie a établi des précédents importants en droit international sur le génocide, les crimes de guerre et les crimes contre l'humanité, a rappelé Human Rights Watch. Human Rights Watch a annoncé aujourd'hui la publication en français d'un recueil de jurisprudence qui organise par thèmes les décisions du Tribunal Pénal International sur le Rwanda.

«Le travail des deux tribunaux ad hoc représente l'effort le plus significatif depuis Nuremberg pour traduire en justice les auteurs des crimes les plus graves», a déclaré Jennifer Trahan, conseillère pour le Programme de Justice Internationale, à Human Rights Watch.

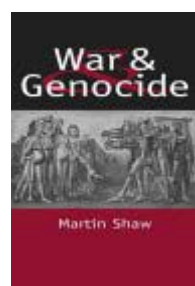

Malgré certaines faiblesses dans leur fonctionnement, les tribunaux pénaux internationaux ont joué un rôle crucial pour tenir responsables les auteurs de crimes horribles commis en ex-Yougoslavie et au Rwanda et délivrer le message que des crimes d'une telle ampleur ne demeureront pas impunis dans le futur, a soutenu Human Rights Watch.

Le rapport de Human Rights Watch organise les différentes décisions du Tribunal Pénal International pour le Rwanda selon les thèmes juridiques dont elles traitent, comme, par exemple : le crime de génocide, les crimes contre l'humanité, les crimes de guerre, la responsabilité pénale individuelle, la responsabilité du supérieur et les peines.

«L'objectif de ce rapport est de rendre l'importante jurisprudence du TPIR accessible», a expliqué Trahan. «Les décisions vont avoir une influence importante quant aux efforts futurs pour lutter contre l'impunité et poursuivre les auteurs de tels crimes.»

La version anglaise du livre contient la jurisprudence du Tribunal Pénal International pour le Rwanda et du Tribunal Pénal International pour l'ex-Yougoslavie. Les versions anglaise et française sont disponibles en ligne (<http://hrw.org/reports/2004/ij/> et <http://hrw.org/french/reports/2005/ictr0505/>, respectivement) et en version écrite (<http://store.yahoo.com/hrwpubs/2004reports.html>). Le recueil est destiné à faciliter le travail des professionnels impliqués dans des poursuites pour crimes de guerre, crimes contre l'humanité et génocide, au niveau national ou international, comme à la Cour Pénale Internationale et à la Cour Spécial pour la Sierra Leone. Les publications serviront aussi d'outils pour les universitaires, les organisations non gouvernementales, et les étudiants intéressés par la justice pénale internationale.

War and Genocide: Organized Killing in Modern Society Martin Shaw

Cambridge, UK: Polity Press, 2003. CallNo 05SA002

...The common experience of genocide is of cumulative discrimination of enemies and targets leading to indiscriminate slaughter. For victims, the threat to their social, personal and physical existence is very similar regardless of the particular reasons for it in the minds of their killers. In practice killing has a deeply arbitrary aspect, often appearing 'senseless'. If Nazism is our model of genocide, we need to put alongside the images of clinical selection for the gas chambers the roadside massacres and mass burnings of villagers - often Jews and non-Jews alike - by special commando groups in occupied Soviet territory, which preceded extermination in the camps. From the standpoint of the victims, genocide can be deeply arbitrary. Whether the Nazis were killing you because you were a Jew, a Slav, a Soviet citizen or a Communist, or all or none of these, was not so important as the fact that you were going to be killed. Moreover, all genocidists kill for a range of reasons and at the same time, seemingly, for none in particular. As we shall see later in this book, they target young men because they are potential fighters or producers; old people for the opposite reason, their uselessness; women because of the significance of sexual power. But in the end, killing is killing and tends to lead to more killing. Slaughter can appear utterly casual, arbitrary and senseless. There is (il)logic in terror and murder that surpasses the pseudo-rational discrimination dictated by strategy and political ideology, even as it fulfils them.” Martin Shaw
