Abstract: This book examines the establishment, functions and significance of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. It sought an answer to whether the Tribunal could carry out its duties as an impartial judicial body, given that it was established for political purposes. It is argued that the external political function did not undermine the Tribunal's status as an impartial judicial body, but rather enhanced its effectiveness.

Enlightened Leadership: Getting to the Heart of Change

Ed Oakley and Doug Krug

ISBN: 0671866753 Call No 05Y011

Enlightened Leadership is a practical, hands-on guide to breaking through the barriers to organizational change. Doug Krug and Ed Oakley show why most efforts at change fail — and they provide leaders with proven methods for getting their people moving in the right direction.

The key lies in showing those who would be change agents how to capitalize on their organization's greatest asset: the under-utilized talent, expertise, and energy of its existing staff. The authors' program is based on maximizing the contributions of all employees — by sharing information, decision-making, and planning with them — creating a shared culture of organizational goals, strategies, and methods.

CONFERENCE ALERTS

International Law Association British Branch Spring Conference 2006:

Tower of Babel - International Law in the 21st Century – Coherent or Compartmentalised?

March 3, 2006 - March 4, 2006
London, England

Hosted by University College London and the School of Oriental and African Studies
In recent years much critical attention has focused on the challenges raised by the proliferation of international courts and tribunals, yet just as important as, and related to, this development is the expansion in the substantive content of international law. Many established areas of law have become more complex; new areas of law have emerged. In this context, the challenges raised by relationship between different areas of law have become acute. How should principles developed in different categories of law relate to each other, for example trade law and environmental law? How should the meaning of separate but similar obligations conceived in relation to the same subject matter, for example state and individual responsibility for genocide, be understood in the light of this overlap? What underlying principles should apply in such circumstances, and to what extent are they capable of universal application? What significance should be attached to general concepts such as lex specialis and the idea of normative hierarchy reflected in UN Charter Article 103 and norms of jus cogens?

The conference will attempt to address these challenges, with panels covering a wide range of areas of law and theoretical approaches. Panels will reflect a diverse range of perspectives, and be composed of both junior and established academics (including doctoral students) and practitioners. The conference will run for two full days on Friday and Saturday, with a mixture of plenary and twin-panel sessions and a conference dinner on the Friday evening. There will be a call for papers in October to which all will be encouraged to submit proposals.
